I. Purpose of This Booklet

Every crime victim has the right to file a civil lawsuit seeking financial compensation from the perpetrator or from other parties whose unreasonable conduct gave rise to conditions which allowed the crime to occur. The purpose of this handbook is to provide victims and service providers with a basic understanding of the civil justice system so that victims might consider this important option and know where to turn for help.

II. Victims’ Financial Losses and Potential Sources of Compensation

Almost nineteen million Americans are victimized by crime each year. The consequences of crime frequently extend far beyond the criminal act. All too often, victims are left with expenses for medical procedures, physical rehabilitation, counseling, lost wages, and property damage. It has been estimated that crime costs society $450 billion annually.

Restitution

Colorado law requires that in every order of conviction for a felony, misdemeanor, petty or traffic misdemeanor offense the court shall either award restitution to the victim(s) or state a specific finding that no victim of the crime suffered a loss as is defined under the restitution statute. The prosecution has burden of proving, by a preponderance of the evidence that an expense was proximately caused by a defendant’s conduct.

The purpose of a restitution order is to decrease the financial burden caused by the crime and to preserve the individual dignity of victims. A victim may be any individual or an entity directly and immediately aggrieved by the defendant’s criminal conduct. Expenses that may be reimbursed to the victim(s) in a restitution order include all out-of-pocket expenses incurred from emotional or psychological treatment, anticipated future expenses, rewards paid by victims, adjustment expenses, moving expenses, anticipated medical expenses, and other losses or injuries proximately caused by a defendant’s conduct, but does not include damages for physical or mental pain and suffering. Restitution orders must include pre-judgment interest at a rate of 8% annum and post judgment interest at a rate of 12% annum.
Payment of restitution is due upon the issuance of the restitution order. If a defendant claims he cannot pay the full amount of restitution, he will be assigned a collections investigator who will assess the defendant’s financial ability to pay the restitution. A payment schedule may be set up to allow restitution payments over time. In the case of a juvenile defendant, the collections investigator may conduct the investigation into the juvenile’s parents’ or legal guardian’s financial circumstances, as well as the juvenile’s. An order for restitution is a final civil judgment that will survive the defendant’s death and may not be discharged in bankruptcy proceedings. However, juvenile restitution orders may be discharged in bankruptcy proceedings.

Colorado Crime Victim Compensation

The Colorado Crime Victim Compensation Program (CVCP) can help victims and family members of victims of violent crimes that occurred after July 1, 1982. CVCP may cover up to $20,000 in medical expenses, mental health expenses, lost wages, loss of support to dependants, funeral expenses, and residential property damage. To qualify the crime must be one in which the victim sustained mental or bodily injury, died, or suffered property damage to locks, windows or doors to residential property as a result of a compensable crime. The victim must notify the police within 72 hours after the crime occurred and must cooperate in the investigation and prosecution of the case. A victim must not have contributed to her own injury by wrongdoing or substantial provocation of the defendant.

Victims must apply for compensation within one year of the date of the crime or six months if it is for property damage claims. This time limit may be extended only for good cause shown. Emergency compensation up to $1,000 maybe awarded pending the CCVP’s Board’s review of the victim’s application if it is determined that undue hardship will result to the applicant if immediate payment is not made.

Civil Actions May Help Where Restitution and State Compensation Cannot

Both restitution and compensation, alone, often do not cover a victim’s full economic losses, nor hard-to-quantify damages such as pain and suffering. A civil lawsuit may provide more complete compensation to a victim.
III. Why File a Civil Suit

Some of the benefits of civil actions may include:

- Control of the Case - Victims have greater control in a civil suit than in a criminal case because they are a party to the civil case, cannot be excluded from the courtroom, and have final approval of settlement proposals.

- Compensation - Civil actions can provide greater compensation for victims for the monetary damages they suffered, such as medical expenses and lost income. Civil actions can also compensate victims for the emotional damage they have suffered.

- Justice and Accountability - Civil suits can hold offenders directly accountable to victims. These suits give victims their “day in court,” regardless of whether there was a criminal conviction or any prosecution at all.

- Crime Prevention - In addition to suing perpetrators, victims can often sue other responsible parties. Civil actions provide economic incentives for crime prevention. Businesses such as hotels, apartments, and shopping centers sometimes fail to enact proper security measures because they view such expenses as unnecessary. When businesses are held accountable for safety lapses, proper security becomes cheaper than the cost of defending lawsuits. Crime victims’ civil suits have resulted in increased security protection in public places, better oversight and supervision of daycare facilities, and countless other improvements.

IV. Civil Versus Criminal Justice

A significant difference between the criminal and civil court systems is that in a civil case, the victim controls essential decisions shaping the case. It is the victim who decides whether to sue, accept a settlement offer, or go to trial.

The Criminal Justice System

The criminal justice process begins after a crime has been committed and reported to law enforcement. If an arrest has been made and charges have been filed, the offender may be prosecuted. In a criminal prosecution, the crime is considered “a crime against the state.” The victim's role is primarily defined as a witness for the prosecution. Although the prosecuting attorney may be very helpful to the victim and the victim’s family, the prosecutor’s primary responsibility is to represent the interests of the state, not the victim.

The criminal justice process judges the guilt or innocence of accused offenders, and when offenders are found guilty, attempts to punish or rehabilitate them.

The Civil Justice System
The civil justice system does not attempt to determine the innocence or guilt of an offender. Offenders are also not put in prison. Rather, civil courts attempt to determine whether an offender or a third party is liable for the injuries sustained as a result of the crime.

A civil court’s finding of liability usually means that the defendant must pay the victim, or the victim’s family, monetary damages. The civil justice system can provide victims with monetary resources necessary to rebuild their lives. Furthermore, the civil justice system often provides victims and their families with a sense of justice that criminal courts fail to provide. Rather than holding defendants accountable for their “crimes against the state,” the civil justice system holds defendants who are found liable directly accountable to their victims.

Burden of Proof
In the civil justice system, liability must be proven by a fair preponderance of the evidence, which simply means that one side’s evidence is more persuasive than the other’s. In other words, the plaintiff must prove there is a fifty-one percent or greater chance that the defendant committed all the elements of the particular wrong. This standard is lower than the “proof beyond a reasonable doubt” required for a conviction in the criminal justice system. Therefore, it is sometimes possible to find the defendant liable in a civil case even though a verdict of “not guilty” was rendered in the criminal case. (A civil case can also be successful even if the offender was never prosecuted.)

A good example of this principle is the O.J. Simpson case. Simpson was prosecuted for the murder of his former wife, Nicole Brown, and her friend, Ronald Goldman. The jury in the criminal case found Simpson “not guilty” of the murders. Despite Simpson’s acquittal, the families of Nicole Brown and Ron Goldman filed a civil wrongful death lawsuit against Simpson. A trial
CRIMINAL CASES

In a CRIMINAL case

- The goal is to hold the defendant accountable to the State.

- The State prosecutes and controls the case.

- The victim is a witness. Although the victim may have rights to participate in the criminal justice process, the victim does not have the right to direct the prosecution of the case or to veto the prosecutor's decisions.

- The State must prove that the perpetrator is guilty “beyond a reasonable doubt.”

- The perpetrator is presumed innocent until proven guilty.

- If a perpetrator is found guilty in a criminal court, the perpetrator is subject to punishment, such as probation or jail, and is held accountable to the State. The victim will not obtain money unless the court orders the defendant to pay restitution for the victim’s out-of-pocket expenses. The court cannot order restitution for non-economic damages.

- If the perpetrator is found not guilty, the state cannot initiate a second prosecution.

was held in 1997 and Simpson was found liable for the deaths of Brown and Goldman. The jury in the civil case awarded the victims’ families $33.5 million in damages. While a criminal conviction may increase the chances of a perpetrator being held civilly liable, it is not a requirement for bringing a civil action.
CIVIL LAWSUITS

In a CIVIL lawsuit

...the goal is to hold the defendant accountable to the victim.

...the victim initiates and controls the case.

...the victim is a party, and as such, is entitled to all important information relating to the case, and can make important decisions about the case, such as settlement of the claim.

...the victim must prove that it is more likely than not that the perpetrator is liable.

...the civil system makes no presumption. The victim and the perpetrator appear as equals.

...if the perpetrator is found liable in a civil court, the perpetrator owes an obligation to the victim, such as money to compensate the victim for medical and therapy expenses, psychological damage, damage to family relationships, and lost wages. A civil court can order the perpetrator to pay for non-economic damages, such as pain and suffering, damage to family relationships, and psychological injuries. The civil court can also order punitive damages.

...the victim can sue the perpetrator in a civil court regardless of whether the perpetrator has been found guilty in a criminal prosecution.

V. Parties in a Civil Suit

Plaintiffs

The main parties in a civil suit are called plaintiffs and defendants. Plaintiffs are the individuals who file the suit. They control the action, are entitled to all information relating to the case, and make decisions, such as settlement. The plaintiff in a civil suit can be the victim, survivors of the victim, or persons responsible for the victim.
Family Members
Family members who might bring a civil suit include the parents, spouse, children, or siblings of the victim.

Defendants
The defendants are the parties against whom a civil action is brought. The defendants in a civil suit can be the perpetrators, individuals who have assisted the perpetrators, or individuals or organizations whose negligence has in some way contributed to the commission of the crime known as “third parties.”

Offenders
The offenders are the individuals who committed the original offense, whether or not they were found guilty by a criminal court.

Third Parties
In some civil cases, a “third-party” defendant may be held liable. Third-party defendants are not the persons who actually commit the crimes, but instead are those parties who may have contributed to or facilitated the crimes. A few examples of possible third-party defendants in a victim’s case would include:

- landlords who do not provide adequate security measures, such as locks on doors and windows and adequate lighting;
- colleges that fail to provide adequate security for students or fail to notify students of campus assaults, leaving students vulnerable to victimization;
- shopping malls that do not employ security guards or take other necessary measures, despite a likelihood of criminal attacks on customers;
- people who allow children access to firearms or other dangerous instruments when the children, in turn, use the weapons to injure other people;
- childcare centers, schools, and churches that do not properly check the backgrounds of their employees, or simply transfer employees to other locations following allegations of abuse; or
- tavern owners or social hosts who continue to serve alcohol to inebriated persons who subsequently injure other people in drunk driving crashes.
VI. Statutes of Limitations

In Colorado, generally speaking, actions for any form of personal injury is two years, that is, a lawsuit must actually be filed before two years from the date of the injury-producing event. However, for actions against a defendant for assault or battery, a one year statute of limitations applies and begins to run on the date the crime occurred. Therefore, victim who believe they may have a case against the perpetrator, should speak with a qualified attorney immediately.

In an action for recovery of damages resulting from a sexual assault against an adult or sexual offense against a child, the case must be filed within six years from the date of accrual or within six year years after a disability has been removed. A person under a disability includes a victim of a sexual assault who is (1) in a special relationship with the perpetrator, and (2) is psychologically and/or emotionally unable to acknowledge the assault and the harm it caused. A special relationship is defined as a relationship based upon trust, familial or confidentiality (doctor-patient, attorney-client, etc.). This extension does not apply to third parties for negligence. Therefore, victims who believe they may have a case against a third party, such as a child care provider, school district, employer, landlord, etc.), should speak with a qualified attorney immediately.

In an action that involves a claim in negligence by a governmental body for personal injury, prior to filing the suit, specific notice of a claim must be given to the governmental body. This notice must be provided to the local public entity or the state government within one hundred and eight days of the act that gave rise to the injury before the victim is able to file any actions in a court of law. As there are a number of oftentimes complicated issues that one must deal with when asserting a claim against a governmental body, claims involving a governmental body or employees of a governmental body should be dealt with promptly and properly to avoid disallowance of a claim because of a failure to file adequate presentment of the claim. Therefore, victims should speak to an attorney immediately to protect against such short deadlines.
VII. Types of Civil Lawsuits

There are numerous claims under which civil actions may be brought. They include wrongful death, assault and battery, intentional or negligent infliction of emotional distress, and negligence. Some of these claims are described below.

In civil cases, the crime or wrongful act is referred to as a tort. For most criminal offenses, there is a corresponding tort for which a crime victim may bring a civil suit. Some examples of torts include:

- Assault - putting the victim in fear of immediate injury while the perpetrator has the ability to inflict such injury.

- Battery - intentional physical contact with a person without that person's consent. Battery includes the crimes of sexual battery, rape, molestation, fondling, forcible sodomy, malicious wounding, and attempted murder.

- Wrongful Death - a death caused by another person which occurs without justification or excuse, including murder, manslaughter, and vehicular homicide.

- False Imprisonment - holding a victim against his or her will for any amount of time, no matter how brief. This often occurs in rape and kidnapping situations.

- Intentional or Reckless Infliction of Emotional Distress - causing a victim emotional distress or anxiety through extreme and offensive conduct. Emotional distress is frequently seen in stalking cases.

- Fraud - an intentional misrepresentation of facts made to deceive the victim, resulting in damages. This is often seen in white collar or economic crimes such as criminal fraud, telemarketing schemes, or racketeering.

- Conversion - the theft or destruction of personal property or money. This includes larceny, concealment, and embezzlement.

- Negligence - the failure to use such care as a reasonably prudent person would use under similar circumstances, when such failure is the cause of the plaintiff's injury. Examples include negligent security and negligent hiring.
Perpetrator Defenses

There are several defenses that defendants of a civil lawsuit may use in an effort to avoid civil liability. These defenses include: self defense, comparative negligence, assumption of risk, and immunity.

- Self Defense - perpetrators claim their actions were justified because they were defending themselves or someone else.

- Comparative Negligence - the defendant claims that the victim’s negligent conduct caused or contributed to the victim’s injuries. In Rhode Island, the amount of money a successful plaintiff collects will be reduced by the plaintiff's proportional share of the blame for the injury.

- Assumption of Risk - defendants claim they should not be held liable because the victims voluntarily and knowingly exposed themselves to the danger.

- Immunity - Under certain circumstances, the law provides immunity from civil liability to government agencies, government employees, and other parties.

VIII. Victim Privacy

Attorneys may employ various methods to protect victims’ privacy. Victims’ names and other personal information can be kept out of public records by filing suits under pseudonyms, such as Jane or John Doe. Victims can also use confidentiality agreements with the offender, or third-party defendant; file cases “under seal” (closed to the public); and videotape depositions. Each of these techniques allows victims to fight for their rights in a safer manner.

IX. Filing a Civil Lawsuit

A victim begins the civil case by filing a document that in most states is called the complaint. The complaint sets out the facts of the case and the legal claims being made. Defendants then have a certain amount of time to file a document called the answer. In this, defendants set forth their version of the facts and any defenses which apply. As a part of the process of the case, either side can request information from the other side. (For more information, see “Discovery.”) In addition, either party can file motions asking the court to throw out certain claims or defenses or dismiss the entire case.
X. Discovery

As part of the legal process, each side can ask the other side for information and documents relating to the case. This process is called discovery. Civil discovery involves investigations of the facts and circumstances of the case, interviewing witnesses, obtaining relevant documents, and questioning parties and other witnesses under oath. The investigation may include a review of police records, informal interviews of eye witnesses, and photographing the location of the crime.

Interrogatories

Interrogatories are a list of questions sent to the opposing party. They are usually limited in number by the court rules of the jurisdiction in which the case has been filed. Both requests for production of documents and interrogatories must be answered in a specified amount of time.

Request for Production of Documents

Like interrogatories, document requests are a formal procedure by which one side can ask the other side to produce documents and other materials relevant to the case.

Depositions

An additional method for obtaining information in the pretrial portion of a civil case is a deposition. A deposition is a proceeding in which a party’s attorney has the opportunity to question opposing parties and potential witnesses under oath. Deposition testimony is transcribed. The transcripts may be used at trial for various reasons, including if the witnesses are no longer available or if the witnesses offer trial testimony which conflicts with the deposition.

After documents have been produced, interrogatories have been answered, and depositions have been completed, each side should know much more about the other side’s case. At this point, the parties sometimes engage in negotiations which lead to settlement of the case.
XI. Trial

If a settlement is not reached, the case proceeds to trial. A plaintiff wins at trial if the plaintiff has met its burden of proof and the defendant has not successfully asserted a defense to the claim. If the plaintiff wins, the judge or jury awards damages and the matter is over unless the defendant appeals. A defendant wins at trial if the plaintiff has not met the burden of proof or the defendant has successfully asserted a defense. If the defendant wins, the case is finished unless the plaintiff appeals.

XII. Damages

Judges and juries have the power to decide how much money to award as damages if the plaintiff wins. There are two main types of damages, compensatory and punitive. The goal of compensatory damages is to pay for the losses suffered by the injured party. The primary purpose of punitive damages is to punish and deter criminals or third parties.

XIII. Judgment and Enforcement

A victim contemplating a civil lawsuit should understand that obtaining a civil judgment is only half the battle. In many cases, it may be difficult to collect the money awarded by the court. Some defendants do not or cannot pay judgments entered against them. However, there are potential sources of payment, such as insurance or various types of income, which should always be considered.

XIV. When a Perpetrator Sues a Victim

Occasionally, offenders may sue or countersue victims. Defendants may take this step in order to harass or intimidate victims into dropping charges or withdrawing their civil suits. Sometimes these suits are filed in response to the victim’s civil complaint, along with answers to the complaint. Sometimes perpetrators file them in response to a criminal charge. Victims need to know that truth is an absolute defense to defamation and slander, which are the most common civil claims filed by perpetrators.
XV. About Lawyers

Finding a Lawyer
The National Center for Victims of Crime established the National Crime Victim Bar Association (NCVBA) to facilitate civil suits by crime victims. The NCVBA offers victims free referrals to attorneys for consultation.

Victims seeking more information or attorney referrals should call the NCVBA at 202-467-8716

Selection Considerations
More attorneys than ever are representing crime victims in civil lawsuits, though relatively few specifically list themselves as “crime victim” attorneys. Typically, these attorneys can be found handling premises liability, personal injury, wrongful death, or professional malpractice claims on behalf of plaintiffs. Finding qualified attorneys to represent victims in civil lawsuits often requires diligence.

A productive attorney-client relationship is based on the ability of both sides to communicate fully and effectively with each other. Although relating sensitive details can be difficult for crime victims, they should feel as comfortable as possible in fully disclosing all details and information to their attorneys. Attorneys should be able to effectively explain all aspects of legal proceedings to victims, and they should be responsive to victims’ needs and requests.

Victims should fully understand all the details of any retainer agreement (contract to hire the attorney) prior to signing it. If victims have questions, they should feel comfortable discussing them with their attorneys. If questions persist, local bar association personnel may be able to explain laws, regulations, and common practices pertaining to contracts with attorneys.

Victims should be clear about what they wish their attorneys to do, and attorneys should be clear about what services they are providing. Understanding each other’s expectations—as well as avoiding unrealistic expectations—can minimize the possibility of disappointment and frustration.

Victims should feel free to consult with several lawyers before selecting one. Lawyers are professionals, and it is good consumer practice to obtain a second opinion in selecting professional legal counsel.
Victims should cooperate, as fully as possible, with their attorneys. Such cooperation is necessary for successful representation of their interests. By the same token, victims have the right to expect their attorneys to be understanding, respectful, and responsive to their needs. Attorneys have the right to expect their clients to be honest and willing to participate in building their own cases.

Information Your Attorney May Need
When crime victims consult with an attorney, they should be prepared to answer detailed questions about the case that will allow the attorney to conduct a proper evaluation. Attorneys might request information such as the following:

About the Criminal Event:
- Date and time of criminal occurrence
- Location of events, addresses, and description of premises
- How the perpetrator gained access to the victim
- Identification of witnesses to any stage of the occurrence
- Identification of known physical evidence
- Whether a police report was filed, and if so, identification of: the police department where the complaint was filed, the detective or officer assigned to the case, the complaint or report number, and statements taken as part of an investigation
- Whether there was or is a criminal case, and if so, identification of: the prosecutor, current stage of criminal case, and description of the case investigation conducted
- If a third party might bear some liability for the occurrence of the crime: details surrounding the crime, such as where it was committed become and whether there was any security

About the Perpetrator:
- If the perpetrator is known to the victim: nature of relationship with victim, perpetrator’s name and aliases, address, date of birth and Social Security Number, employment information, and any information known about the perpetrator’s assets and insurance coverage
If the perpetrator is not known to the victim: physical description of the perpetrator, identifying features

About Damages Sustained by the Victim:
- Medical information: degree of physical, emotional, and psychological injuries sustained, and extent and cost of anticipated treatment
- Identification of hospital, physician services
- Identification of property damage
- Lost amount of victim’s or victim’s spouse’s time from work, lost wages, money recouped from workers’ compensation, or state or private disability insurance
- Source of funds to cover damages or losses such as insurance (policy number), crime victims’ compensation, Medicare, and restitution

Fees and Retainers
Usually, the types of civil cases brought by victims of crime are billed by attorneys on a contingency fee basis. This means the attorney is only paid if the victim is awarded a monetary settlement or judgment. Attorneys will be paid a predetermined percentage of the total award.

There are also costs, such as filing fees, deposition fees, and service of process fees the victim might be responsible to pay before a suit is filed or during the course of the suit. Some attorneys require that plaintiffs pay a retainer fee. A retainer is money paid to an attorney, but kept in a special account from which the above-mentioned costs can be paid. Money not used in the retainer may be returned to the client at the conclusion of the suit.

XVI. Conclusion
The civil justice system offers victims of crime another opportunity to secure what they seek most—justice. Regardless of whether there was a successful criminal prosecution or any prosecution at all, victims can bring their claims before the court and ask to have the responsible parties held accountable. While money awarded in civil lawsuits can never fully compensate victims for the trauma of their victimizations or the loss of loved ones, it can provide valuable resources for crime victims to help rebuild their lives.
