From Secrecy to the Spotlight: How 40 years of Catholic Church litigation changed the framework for handling child sex abuse cases

9:00 AM – 10:30 AM | Location: Palm Ballroom

PLenary Session

In 1985, National Catholic Reporter reporter Jason Berry released a stunning exposé detailing how a popular Louisiana priest was known to be molesting children for years. That same year, the Diocese of Lafayette and its insurers agreed to pay at least $4.2 million, the priest later pleaded guilty and was sentenced to 20 years in prison "at hard labor" and with no possibility of parole.

This compelling plenary session delves into those first groundbreaking lawsuits against the Catholic Church, which led to a pivotal movement in the legal landscape establishing a case for institutional accountability. This panel will explore how these landmark cases not only pioneered the concept of holding institutions accountable for sexual abuse but also laid the groundwork for similar lawsuits against various organizations, including Michigan State, the US Olympic Committee, the Boy Scouts, and others. These cases have had the largest impact in forcing large institutions, such as religious organizations, schools, and child serving organizations, to change their policies and practices to keep our children safer.

Our panel consists of attorneys, survivors, and industry experts—each with over 25 years of experience—will provide invaluable insights into the evolution of litigation against the Catholic Church. We will examine the Church's response to these legal challenges and the strategies they employed to mitigate further litigation. Additionally, the session will highlight how these lawsuits have triggered significant legislative reforms, including changes in statutes of limitations, and other critical protections for victims of abuse. This engaging discussion promises to shed light on the ongoing fight for justice and accountability within institutions, reflecting on past accomplishments and looking ahead to future developments in the field.

Image-based Abuse 101: What Advocates and Justice Professionals Need to Know About This Growing Form of Abuse

10:45 AM – 12:15 PM | Location: Salon I

Technology

The surge in image-based abuse cases over the past five years highlights the urgent need for a deeper understanding of this growing form of abuse and the ways communities must begin to respond. The workshop will discuss what image-based abuse is and its prevalence; its impact on survivors; existing laws and policies, including survivor rights; barriers to justice; and what's next in the fight against this abuse. In addition, it will explore the strengths and opportunities to enhance resources for survivors. Participants will review efforts from both the U.S. and globally, and discuss next steps for their own communities.

From Fear to Foundation: Creating Housing Stability for Domestic Violence Survivors

10:45 AM – 12:15 PM | Location: Salon II

SEXUAL & DOMESTIC VIOLENCE

Housing instability is one of the greatest barriers that survivors of domestic violence face when trying to escape abusive relationships. Without access to safe, stable, and affordable housing, many survivors are forced to choose between homelessness and returning to their abuser. This workshop will explore the systemic challenges survivors encounter when seeking housing, including financial abuse, eviction history due to domestic violence, and the lack of trauma-informed housing policies. Participants will gain insights into innovative advocacy strategies, housing-first approaches, and community collaborations that empower survivors to rebuild their lives.

Applying Findings from the VictimConnect Evaluation to Improve Victim Services

10:45 AM – 12:15 PM | Location: Salon III

ORGANIZATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

The National Center for Victims of Crime's VictimConnect Resource Center is the only national helpline serving victims of all crimes. It provides relevant referrals, information, and emotional support through anonymous call, chats, and texts. NCVC has partnered with the Urban Institute to evaluate VictimConnect's implementation and impact on victims and other service providers. In this workshop, attendees will learn from and engage with NCVC's staff who operate VictimConnect as well as the VictimConnect evaluation team. The session will first introduce attendees to VictimConnect's background and service model before sharing an overview of the evaluation and its findings. The team will focus on the recommendations for victim service providers generally and for programs with hotlines specifically to increase access to and improve delivery of their services. For example, attendees will have the opportunity to discuss implications for staffing, use of technology, and engagement with victims.

Restorative Justice Expands Victim Choices and Elevates Victim Voices

10:45 AM – 12:15 PM | Location: Salon VI

CRIMINAL JUSTICE

Many crime victims envision a more expansive definition of justice outside of the offender focused criminal justice system we all know. This expansion of justice options can be found within the spectrum of Restorative Justice. This workshop will provide an overview of restorative justice practices and principles that can provide opportunities for victims' voices to be elevated and for offenders to learn more about the impact of the harm they have caused.

Preparing for a Mass Violence Incident in Your Community: Lessons Learned from Responding to the Apalachee High School Shooting in Winder, GA

10:45 AM – 12:15 PM | Location: Narcissus/Orange

MASS VIOLENCE

The NMVC responded to the tragic school shooting at Apalachee High School that occurred on September 4, 2024, which included providing resources and guidance on how to best provide mental health support to students, parents, and teachers. During these response activities, it was highlighted that areas where the community had prepared for potential violence predicted how resilient the individuals and community members were in the weeks and months that followed. This session will describe the response to Apalachee High School and present the 16 Best Practices to MVI Preparedness, with examples and lessons learned from this specific community. We will also describe the many resources available to help survivors, professionals, first responders, and communities from the National Mass Violence Center.

Breaking Barriers, Building Futures: Advancing Reentry Services for Women and Survivors

1:00 PM – 2:00 PM | Location: Palm Ballroom

PLENARY SESSION

Women and survivors of trauma face unique and often compounding challenges when navigating reentry into the community after incarceration or involvement in the justice system. This plenary will explore innovative approaches to reentry services that center healing, dignity, and empowerment.

Through a dynamic conversation with lived-experience experts, service providers, and funders, participants will examine systemic barriers that disproportionately impact formerly incarcerated women and survivors as well as best practices and emerging models that foster successful reintegration and healing. Attendees will leave with actionable strategies to enhance service delivery, promote equity, and advocate for systemic reforms that support women and all survivors reentering their communities.

Implementing Evidence-Based Practices in Victim Services

2:15 PM – 3:45 PM | Location: Salon I

ORGANIZATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Safety, justice, and healing depend on agencies' ability to deliver effective and efficient services when responding to those who were harmed. Yet despite the growing body of victim services research into effective practices, there exists a gap between the knowledge generated and integration of new techniques and models in practitioner settings. We collaborated with the National Center for Victims of Crime (NCVC) to identify evidence-based practices, compiling a training and coaching package to address violence, trauma, and harm. In this presentation, we discuss the approach and its underlying theory and how we will educate and coach agencies on its use, including opportunities to sign up for free training. Healing from Within: Integrating Trauma-Informed Yoga, Meditation, and Breathing Practices into Trauma Care

2:15 PM – 3:45 PM | Location: Salon II

TRAUMA-INFORMED PRACTICES

This session explores the intersection of trauma-informed care and the holistic benefits of yoga, meditation, and breathing practices. Participants will gain insights into how these mind-body approaches can support trauma recovery, foster resilience, and improve overall well-being. This session will define trauma and its effects, the science of healing, practical applications, how to integrate mind-body therapies and traditional therapies, and a guided meditation and grounding exercise during our session. In addition to the main session, we are planning to offer an optional Guided Trauma-Informed Yoga session, which will take place outside of our scheduled presentation time—either before or after the conference, depending on scheduling availability. This additional session will be open to all conference participants and will emphasize body awareness, gentle movement, and mindfulness practices, with a specific focus on creating a safe, supportive environment for individuals at all levels of experience.

Multiple Pathways to Accountability: The New York City Model

2:15 PM – 3:45 PM | Location: Salon III

SEXUAL & DOMESTIC VIOLENCE

In New York City, the Center for Justice Innovation partnered with the Coalition on Working with Abusive Partners (now known as HEARTS) and the NYC Mayor's Office to End Domestic and Gender-Based Violence to create a plan and implement a comprehensive approach for abusive partner intervention. After a year of focus groups and listening sessions with criminal and civil legal system stakeholders, community-based organizations, advocates, survivors, and people who cause harm through intimate partner violence, the Seeding Generations report highlighted the need to create multiple pathways to accountability and healing for people who cause harm. As a result of this initiative, New York City, via an interdisciplinary coalition of practitioners, now offers culturally enhanced and trauma-informed mandated programming, voluntary programming unconnected to systems entirely, community-based education approaches at the intersection of intimate partner violence and gun violence, brief education classes for people on supervised release, training and support for practitioners, and a restorative justice collaborative to support practitioners engaging in restorative approaches to IPV. In this panel, program staff, a researcher and a representative from the Mayor's office will highlight these programs and the benefits of New York City's approach to provide comprehensive engagement and intervention for abusive partners.

When They Want to Take It Back: Reluctance and Recantations in DV/IPV

2:15 PM – 3:45 PM | Location: Salon VI

SEXUAL & DOMESTIC VIOLENCE

The complexity of domestic and intimate partner violence may involve significant factors that influence victims to be uncooperative, even in a short amount of time when the incident took place. What is critical is understanding dynamics that increase the likelihood of recantation or reluctance from a victim so as to better identify those factors and understand how to thoughtfully respond to them. This knowledge and reaction is imperative for an appropriate response that continues to seek justice and integrate appropriate services for the individual. This session includes activity-based discussions to explore this critical topic.

Preparing for a Mass Violence Incident in Your Community: Strategies to Improve Preparedness Plans to Address Victim Needs at a Critical Time: What Aren't We Thinking Of?

2:15 PM – 3:45 PM | Location: Narcissus/Orange

MASS VIOLENCE

No one wants to think that a mass violence incident (MVI) can occur in their community, but MVIs can occur anywhere and at any time. No community is immune. One of the most impactful ways to avoid the chaos that accompanies these incidents and to promote short- and long-term recovery, is to be prepared. What are the things a community should do in developing a victim-centered, trauma informed plan? The NMVC has responded to a number of mass violence events and understands the lessons each community learns from their preparation and response. This session will focus on the 16 Best Practices to MVI Preparedness with a specific focus on sometimes overlooked but important issues such as volunteer management, financial donations, memorial planning and the criminal justice system.

A Comprehensive Approach to Care for Financial Fraud Victims and Loved Ones

4:00 PM – 5:30 PM | Location: Salon I

FINANCIAL CRIMES

Financial fraud is a complex, ever-changing type of crime that is often misunderstood in terms of the impact on victims and their loved ones and the complexity of the crime syndicates that operate these scams. One of the greatest challenges the field faces is preventing re-victimization, which happens at alarming rates due to the shame and isolation victims often feel.

Preventing re-victimization means ensuring victims and their loved ones receive the appropriate mental health support, which can be challenging if searching solely for an informed clinician. This session addresses the healing journey of an often overlooked, underreported, and underserved population within victim services.

Participants will learn how to support individuals with empathy while identifying and creating the resources needed to create safe spaces. Professionals will learn how to access training for clinicians to better serve the fraud community and how to connect victims and loved ones to peer support.

Survivors of High Profile Tragedies & the Media: Filling a Critical Gap in Support

4:00 PM – 5:30 PM | Location: Salon III

MEDIA

Survivors should have more of a say in if, when and how their stories are told. Often, survivors of high-profile tragedies like mass trauma incidents, homicides, suicides, missing persons and climate crises face unexpected and often unwanted media attention without support. This gap in services impacts those stepping forward to tell their stories or advocating on their survivor issues in the days, weeks or years after a tragedy. This gap is felt most in under-served communities which face a disproportionate level of violence and access to fewer services. An emerging public-private partnership in Massachusetts is filling this gap through a new nonprofit, Survivors Say and in collaboration with victim advocates, law enforcement, government, faith leaders, health care providers and community organizations. Through a trauma- and survivor-informed approach, we support survivors, victim advocates and other partners to upend that dynamic and ensure survivors have the support wherever and whenever they need it.

Behind the Charge: Working Towards Safety for Victims/Survivors Involved in the Criminal Legal System

4:00 PM – 5:30 PM | Location: Salon VI

CRIMINAL JUSTICE

This interactive training session is designed for advocates, service providers, legal professionals, and community stakeholders seeking to deepen their understanding of the complex experiences of victimization and survivors who become involved in the criminal legal system. Through case studies, discussion, and practical tools, participants will explore the systemic pathways that often funnel survivors into criminalization, and the compounding challenges they face once inside the system.

By the end of this session, participants will be able to:

- Understand the social, economic, and systemic factors that lead victims/survivors into contact with the criminal legal system.
- Recognize the unique and often overlooked challenges survivors face post-entry, including stigma, retraumatization, and lack of access to supportive services.
- Apply trauma-informed and survivor-centered strategies to promote healing, safety, and accountability in their work.
- Identify systemic barriers and advocate for alternative approaches, including diversion programs, restorative practices, and policy reforms.

Whether you're new to this work or looking to refine your practice, this session offers critical insights and actionable strategies to better support survivors navigating the criminal legal system.

Helping the Helpers: How do we foster resilience and reduce trauma in our work as victim service professionals?

10:30 AM – 12:00 PM | Location: Narcissus/Orange

MASS VIOLENCE

Although the world is full of suffering, it is also full of the overcoming of it. — Helen Keller

Resilience is the process of adapting in the face of adversity. All humans face stressors, suffering, and challenges throughout our lives. Many victim service professionals describe anxiety, burnout, fatigue, and vicarious trauma in the work we do in the helping field. This can be especially challenging for those working with individuals and communities impacted by mass violence. Special attention will be spent during this training to discuss the unique aspects of the impact of mass violence on victim service professionals. Strengthening strategies to foster resilience can help improve quality of daily life, enhance competence in managing life stressors, improve satisfaction in the work we do, and prevent the development of long-term health complications. This training will provide several practical approaches to coping with emotional distress, clarify our values to strengthen the “why,” and practice compassion for oneself.

The Powerful Use of Corporate Representative Depositions Simplified and Made Practical In Order to Advance Your Client's Case

11:15 AM – 12:00 PM | Location: Salon IV-V

NCVBA

This presentation will walk you through how to effectively (and practically) take advantage of the corporate representative deposition regardless of the state in which you practice. The corporate representative deposition - often known as the 30(b)(6) rule in federal litigation - is more than just a deposition reserved for corporations like McDonalds and Pepsi. Almost every state (if not every state) has a 30(b)(6) equivalent. This is a powerful tool to elicit testimony in a case, identify witnesses a defendant has failed to disclose, and identify documents a defendant has refused to produce. This presentation will walk you through preparing for the 30(b)(6) with practical advice on how to frame topics, to taking the actual deposition, to handling witnesses who give you unsubstantiated testimony, to following up on documents and witnesses the corporate representative identifies but which the defendant has refused to provide to you in discovery. This presentation will use real life examples, including video footage of deposition testimony by corporate

If you've never thought about the ways in which the laws that are applicable to cruise ship crime victims differ from the laws that apply to land-based crime victims, or if you're unaware of all the assumptive rights that cruise passengers unwittingly relinquish when they embark on a cruise ... or, if you have never witnessed the ways in which a cruise ship crime victim's right to pursue justice differs from a land based crime victim's pursuit, you are not alone. You and the 31,000,000 passengers projected to take a cruise this year have much in common. But you have a chance to make a difference. You have a chance to join us in becoming a part of the change you would like to see. Discover ways to help these unique victims, discover ways to change antiquated laws, and ways to give victims a voice for change.

Reporting Barriers for Victims with Disabilities

1:45 PM – 3:15 PM | Location: Salon III

TRAUMA-INFORMED PRACTICES

Our research team has identified gaps and brainstormed 'fixes' to support victims with intellectual and developmental disabilities (IDD) in reporting victimization. We connected with professionals (i.e., law enforcement, advocates), individuals with IDD, and the community (i.e., caregivers, support persons). We will discuss barriers to communication, current policy and available accommodations to support individuals with IDD, and areas for training.

Individuals with IDD are often missing from the creation of data due to, among other things, communication differences. We developed inclusive interview guides. We created visual schedules and social stories to clarify expectations for the research process. A visual schedule provides steps for the types of questions that will be posed during the data collection with images. Social stories support comprehension of a new task for individuals with communication differences. We seek to listen through our work and together develop supports to ensure all voices are heard, especially survivors with IDD.

Victim Service Agencies have an ethical obligation to support their workers, providing a community of care that supports the continuity of care expected and offered to victims/survivors. Restorative Practices align with trauma informed care principles, not just in how we interact with victims/survivors, but also how we interact with and treat our co-workers and colleagues. Restorative Practices are historically rooted in cultures placing high value on respect, integrity and shared responsibility. This workshop aligns these practices to move beyond theory to practice.

HUMAN TRAFFICKING

Studies have indicated that there is a need for a technological solution that addresses the entire continuum of care in victim services. This workshop will showcase a demonstration of a new solution that combines technology with care coordination seamlessly across various service needs: the BRIGHT model. Informed by partners with lived experience in the field through participatory action research, speakers will highlight the needs that arose from prototype tests and focus groups on BRIGHT's usability, and how to address these needs moving forward. These needs include how to adapt the system efficiently for law enforcement, by implementing survivor-advocates within the recovery process. Implications for the system across victimization types will be highlighted. The speakers will workshop with participants regarding establishing this platform in their respective spheres and discuss how to overcome challenges faced by participants in their own fields based on the applicability of BRIGHT outside of the anti-trafficking arena.

JUVENILE VICTIMS

In this session, attendees will learn about Family Service of Rhode Island's Go Team-, a law enforcement/social service co-response model aimed at improving outcomes for traumatized children encountered on crime scenes. The Go Team- model pairs trauma-informed social service professionals with law enforcement to provide immediate, on-scene support and wrap around aftercare for children exposed or witnesses to violence and other traumatic events. This partnership model has operated for over 20 years in numerous Rhode Island communities and has received a number of national awards. Family Service of Rhode Island recently received a Substance and Mental Health Services Administration, National Child Traumatic Stress Network Category II Treatment and Services Adaptation Center grant to establish the Center for Trauma- Informed Policing (TIP Center). The TIP Center will serve as a state-of-the art resource for law enforcement across the nation interested in becoming trauma-informed and replicating FSRI'S Go Team- best practice model, with social service partners to mitigate the effects of childhood trauma exposure, reduce revictimization risk, and divert children away from unnecessary juvenile justice involvement and hospitalization. Getting damages in school sexual harassment and abuse cases after Cummings v. Premier Rehab

4:15 PM – 5:00 PM | Location: Salon IV-V

NCVBA

This presentation would fully address a question that has been asked in the CSA Section of each NCVBA conference I've attended:

how do we get full compensation for victims of sexual harassment after the Supreme Court's decision in Cummings v. Premier Rehab? Before Cummings, practitioners primarily relied on a federal law, Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972, to sue schools for failing to protect students from sexual harassment. But in Cummings, the Supreme Court effectively held that Title IX plaintiffs cannot get damages for emotional distress, which often account for most (if not all) of the damages in school harassment and abuse cases. The decision has had a seismic impact, even causing some lawyers to stop taking school harassment cases altogether.

This presentation would outline three ways that student sexual harassment victims can still get damages after Cummings, drawing on cases the Students' Civil Rights Project has litigated. First, it will detail the types of damages still available under Title IX. Second, it will describe legal theories that can be used to sue institutions for sexual harassment under 42 USC Section 1983 and teach how to avoid common pitfalls in bringing such claims. Third, it will address common state civil rights statutes that may allow students to sue for sexual harassment, often despite immunity statutes that would bar ordinary negligence claims, and describe arguments that courts should interpret those state civil rights laws more expansively than Title IX.

Skills for Psychological Recovery for Victims of Crime

10:15 AM – 11:45 AM | Location: Salon III

MASS VIOLENCE

Adults and children in the United States experience disturbingly high rates of criminal victimization. Victims of crime are at risk for experiencing a range of mental health problems including posttraumatic stress disorder, depression, and substance abuse. Several acute interventions have been developed over the past decade with the goal of being implemented shortly following a traumatic event (i.e., within four weeks), with the aim of reducing risk for longer-term mental health problems. This workshop will provide clinicians, health care providers, first responders, victim advocates, and other victim service professionals with an overview of mental health challenges faced by victimization and traumatically bereaved persons as well as an introduction to the basic concepts of Skills for Psychological Recovery— an early intervention approach relevant to the needs of victims of crime. Needs of mass violence victims will be discussed in the context of early intervention approaches.

Engaging Innovative Approaches to Serving Victims of Crime: Leveraging Peer Support

Historically, the concept of peer support programs has been applied primarily to mental health, substance abuse and occupational challenges. The foundation of peer support draws connections between persons who have experienced adversity and trauma and others currently facing adversity and trauma. The victim services field is ripe for innovation using the peer model. In some ways, this has been happening unofficially for years within underserved and marginalized communities. Similarly, victims and survivors of crime often choose to work or volunteer in the field to help other victims and survivors. Hidden Homicides: The misclassification of domestic violence murders as suicides

1:00 PM – 2:30 PM | Location: Salon VI

SEXUAL & DOMESTIC VIOLENCE

This session will discuss the overwhelming and alarming number of domestic violence homicides that are being staged and misclassified as suicides; how killers are getting away with murder and why Alliance for HOPE International has created three new programs to help law enforcement and family members address suspicious death cases with a history of domestic violence.

For the last seven years, the Training Institute on Strangulation Prevention (a program of the Alliance) has been working on too many suspicious death cases with a history of domestic violence that have been misclassified as suicides or undetermined. These cases have come to our attention through family members and law enforcement. Compelled by a huge gap in our criminal justice system and the potential of hundreds if not thousands of Hidden Homicides, the Alliance has launched the Justice Project, created a new course called Hidden Homicides: Overcoming the Challenges of Staged Crime Scenes and provides on-going support to family members through VOICES for Victims of Hidden Homicides.

The Justice Project seeks to help professionals (law enforcement, homicide detectives, death investigators, coroners and medical) and families of lost loved conduct a second and independent review at suspicious death cases where there is a history of domestic violence. The Hidden Homicides Course (whether 4 hours or 4 days) seeks to train multi-disciplinary professionals how to overcome the challenges of staged crime scenes by providing evidence-based research, new resources and lessons learned from multiple case studies. And VOICES for Victims of Homicides brings family members together who have lost families members under suspicious circumstances to support each other, help other family members, bring awareness and advocate for new laws and improved protocols and practice.

Crime scene staging research has found that most offenders who stage crime scenes are male, most victims are female, and the most common victim-offender relationship involving staging is intimate partner relationships. Seasoned investigators, medical examiners, and prosecutors can be misdirected by killers and can unintentionally close suspicious cases as accidents, suicides, or an overdose. Even classifying the cause of death as "undetermined" essentially closes a case for all practical purposes. The research also shows that a large percentage of law enforcement officers are not trained in staged crime scenes.

In 2024, the Alliance brought their growing concern about Hidden Homicides to the attention then OVC Director Kris Rose who conducted a Listening Session with Family Members of VOICES for Victims of Hidden Homicides.

In this presentation, the Instructors will discuss:

The findings of the Listening Session,

The gaps of the criminal justice system in addressing Hidden Homicides

The classic signs of a staged crime scenes in domestic violence cases

The new evidence-based 10 Factors of Staged Crime Scenes in Intimate Partner Cases

Lessons learned from handling multiple staged suicides and accidents

The need to interview family members

the need for MDTs to conduct post-mortem lethality and suicidal assessments the need for improved federal and state law and protocols to address suspicious death cases with a history of domestic violence, and

From Survivor to Advocate: Redefining Masculinity to Prevent Power-Based Violence

1:00 PM – 2:30 PM | Location: Salon VII

SEXUAL & DOMESTIC VIOLENCE

This workshop explores the critical role men and boys play in preventing power-based violence by redefining masculinity. Henry Lliguicota-Lema, a child survivor of domestic violence, uses his personal story and experiences to advocate for change and educate his community. Participants will examine the societal norms and expectations, known as the “Man Box,” that limit men’s emotional expression and contribute to violence. Through Henry’s personal story, statistical insights, and interactive discussions, attendees will learn about traditional masculinity’s impact on perpetrators and victims. The workshop will also highlight the significance of addressing Adverse Childhood Experiences (ACEs) and the importance of peer and school-based programs as primary interventions. Drawing on Henry’s experience educating teen and college students on violence prevention, this session aims to foster an inclusive and empathetic understanding of “manhood,” creating a safer and more supportive environment for all.

Exploring Tactics and Choices: An Interactive Approach to Understanding and Overcoming Abusive Tactics In Intimate Relationships

1:00 PM – 2:30 PM | Location: Salon VIII

SEXUAL & DOMESTIC VIOLENCE

Conversations about intimate partner violence (IPV) often center on survivor safety—and rightly so. However, to achieve true community safety and break cycles of harm, we must also address those who perpetrate violence. What resources and interventions exist for them? How can accountability and education play a role in prevention?

This session introduces Tactics and Choices, a pioneering two-hour program originally created by Men Stopping Violence and now implemented in New York City’s Supervised Release Program. Designed for individuals arraigned on IPV-related offenses, the program focuses on unpacking power dynamics. This session also explores how emotional intelligence, paired with cognitive behavioral therapy (CBT), serves as a powerful tool for crime prevention.

Participants will learn how building self-awareness, emotional regulation, and reframing harmful thought patterns can break cycles of harm and foster safer communities while planting seeds for behavioral change. Participants will learn about the program’s structure, its innovative approach to addressing harmful behaviors, and the unique challenges of delivering complex, emotionally charged content in a short timeframe. The session will also explore the critical role of facilitators in navigating resistance and encouraging engagement. To bring these concepts to life, attendees will have the opportunity to participate in a hands-on mock class session, experiencing firsthand the program’s core components.

A Different Approach to the Most Important Part of the Trial: Jury Selection

1:00 PM – 1:45 PM | Location: Salon IV-V

NCVBA

Let's be honest—the way many of us conduct jury selection is not effective. Why? Because we walk into the courtroom looking for people to kick off, already rejecting the very people we need to trust us. We stereotype based on questionnaires, professions, or demographics before giving jurors a chance. And it doesn't work...

This session offers a practical approach to jury selection with three goals in mind: (1) Earn Credibility, (2) Explore Concerns, and (3) Frame Issues.

You'll learn how to shift from interrogation to conversation, uncover honest answers despite socially desirable response bias, and focus on what truly matters. Because when you accept jurors for who they are, stop fearing them, and genuinely value their perspectives, voir dire becomes one more opportunity to help your client get the justice they deserve.

Litigating a Case with Non-Party Witnesses Who are Minors

1:45 PM – 2:30 PM | Location: Salon IV-V

NCVBA

Litigating a case involving a minor with non-party, minor witnesses presents unique challenges. Privacy and confidentiality shields do not often extend to non-parties. Securing the cooperation of non-party minor witnesses requires a delicate approach through the minor and their parents, guardians or counselors. Once the minor witness agrees to testify, protection of their privacy and their wellbeing throughout the process can be tested by defense positions and requires a measure of advocacy for unrepresented minors.

Transforming Response: Cross-Disciplinary Strategies for Supporting Domestic Violence Survivors

2:45 PM – 4:15 PM | Location: Salon I

SEXUAL & DOMESTIC VIOLENCE

Domestic Violence is a pervasive issue affecting millions of individuals. Survivors often face complex challenges as they seek safety especially when physical violence hasn't been used yet. Kris will share her own experience of coercive control, stalking, and trying to get the justice system to help without success. This sadly concluded in the murder of her three year old daughter, the offenders new girlfriend, and his death by police.

This session will show the missed opportunities the system had to intervene and the critical importance of multi-disciplinary communication. Justin will narrate, prompt questions, and help explain where these missed opportunities were.

Survivor-Led Perspectives: Restorative & Transformative Justice in Response to Harm

2:45 PM – 4:15 PM | Location: Salon II

CRIMINAL JUSTICE

This panel-style workshop will provide survivor-led perspectives on making the case for expanding education and accessibility around justice alternatives in the wake of harm. This workshop will largely focus on a diverse range of survivors' lived experiences and personal story-telling, which will include stories of our experiences with having or seeking restorative justice processes and navigating the criminal legal system. This presentation will include most recent data around rates of sexual violence, which have not decreased in the last few decades (some studies have indicated an increase), will advocate for alternative justice options, such as restorative justice/transformative justice processes, and will explain why these processes may align with survivors' needs after trauma from an intersectional feminist lens. The workshop will also include an offering of tangible calls to action and ways to get involved in supporting the work of survivors advocating for justice pathways that truly catalyze healing.

Advocacy in Antarctica: Confidential support for survivors and bystanders - on and off the ice

2:45 PM – 4:15 PM | Location: Salon VIII

ORGANIZATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

This session will explore the unique role of confidential victim advocates in the most remote continent on the Earth, including insights from the presenter's own deployment to Palmer Station, Antarctica. Attendees will learn more about life at the United States Antarctic Program research bases and review findings from NSF's 2022 Needs Assessment and 2024 Climate Survey. Schwartz will provide an overview of the unique correlations between community-based advocacy and on-ice/remote advocacy, highlighting the need for strong privacy and confidentiality, bystander support, and the application of a public health and multi-disciplinary lens.

Connecting with Purpose: Social Media for Victim Advocacy

2:45 PM – 4:15 PM | Location: Narcissus/Orange

MEDIA

It's no secret that there's power in connection — but getting the word out about critical services can be a challenge. Advocates and organizations of all sizes can use social media to reach broader audiences and form genuine connections that lead to more victims getting the support they need. In this session, you'll learn best practices for growing your reach and creating content that's both victim-centered and trauma-informed.

Navigating Justice: Maritime Sexual Assault Cases

2:45 PM – 3:30 PM | Location: Salon IV-V

NCVBA

Maritime sexual assault cases, particularly those occurring on cruise ships, present a unique and challenging legal landscape. This presentation will provide a focused examination of the key maritime laws governing these incidents. We will explore applicable laws, practical considerations, potential theories of liability and defenses, reporting requirements applicable to vessels on navigable waterways, important statistics, and recent updates on the legal landscape of maritime sexual assault.

Beyond the legal framework, this presentation will offer practical guidance on handling these sensitive cases, from immediate steps for victims and effective evidence preservation. We'll delve into the nuances of cruise ship liability, differentiating between crew member assaults and passenger-on-passenger incidents. The aim is to equip plaintiff lawyers with the knowledge and strategic insights necessary to effectively represent victims of maritime sexual assault and pursue accountability in this complex area of law.
